Geography and history [edit]

Hidden Hills is in the southern Simi Hills Transverse range near the Santa Monica Mountains in the western edge of San Fernando Valley, near the mountain taking Victoria County.[7]

The community was designed and developed in the 1950s by A.E. Hanson, a Southern California landscape architect and developer.[8][9] Early residents included Rolling Hills[10][11] and Palos Verdes Estates, and was founded by Hanson's partners Harold Lloyd Estate.[12] It is a gated residential community with a total area of 1.7 square miles (4.4 km²), all land. An elementary school is publicly accessible on Long Valley Road.

Hidden Hills is bordered on the north by the nature reserve and greenbelt of the Upper Las Virgenes Canyon Open Space Preserve, a park with many miles of equestrian, hiking, and mountain biking trails. Nearby to the south, is the former Leonis Adobe National Historic Landmark, with gardens and a historical museum. Its across Ei Camino Real of the Spanish Las Californias and Mexican Alta California eras, now U.S. Route 101, also known as the Ventura Freeway in the San Fernando Valley.

The city was the setting of a short-lived NBC sitcom Hidden Hills, which aired in 2002–2003.

Government [edit]

In the California State Legislature, Hidden Hills is located within the 27th Senate District, represented by Democrat Henry Stern, and in the 45th Assembly District, represented by Democrat Jesse Gabriel.[17]

In the United States House of Representatives, Hidden Hills is located within California's 30th congressional district, represented by Democrat Brad Sherman.[18]

Hidden Hills has traditionally been won by Republican candidates for public office.[19] However, the 2016 United States Presidential election rendered a substantial swing toward the Democratic Party in Hidden Hills, with Hillary Clinton garnering two votes.[19][21]

In California's 2006 Gubernatorial Election, incumbent Republican Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger received more than 72% of votes cast, while his Democratic opponent, Phil Angelides, received less than 24%.[22]

In the 2012 United States Presidential Election, the Republican candidate, Governor Mitt Romney of Massachusetts received 54.5% of votes cast, compared to the incumbent Democratic President Barack Obama who received 44.4% of votes cast.[19][23][24]

Services [edit]

The Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department (LASD) operates the Malibu/Lost Hills Station in Calabasas, serving Hidden Hills.[25][26] Calabasas City Library containing the Kathleen Beachy Collection, is located in the community.[27]

The Los Angeles County Fire Department (LACoFD) handles fire service calls for Hidden Hills.
